Course Objectives

• To introduce the framing perspective and related research
• To provide opportunity for critical synthesis of this area of the field
• To carry out original research within the framing paradigm

Within the last several years, the concept of framing has become increasingly attractive in media research. Framing refers to the way events and issues are organized, and made sense of, especially by media, media professionals, and their audiences. Frames are organizing principles that are socially shared and persistent over time, that work symbolically to meaningfully structure the social world. This research moves analysis beyond simple discussions of media “bias” to consider the deeper structure within, in particular, news messages. And it makes connections between visual and verbal analysis, quantitative and qualitative, critical and social scientific, psychological and sociological, production and reception. Under this approach, issues are not unproblematic; labeling, classifying, and reducing them to a simple theme is not the straightforward task performed elsewhere. We will review the range of research as captured in the edited volumes designated as text below, along with a representative selection from other sources.

We will consider possibilities for both group and individual seminar research projects related to framing and consider how press coverage of a number of important issues may be pursued in a way intended to generate original empirical research. As a result the readings will be front-loaded in the term so as to prepare as quickly as possible for your own projects. This course is intended for students who already have some familiarity with mass communication theory and methods, although the seminar is available to other advanced students outside the School of Journalism.

Texts (Note: unless otherwise noted, readings refer to chapter in Framing Public Life. All instructor works also available on faculty website above.)

Other Required Readings

Schedule (Read and be prepared to discuss each week’s readings)

April 4 Review of recent literature (class member led) 11 Review of recent literature (class member led)
18 open for consultation and review
25 Individual paper presentations

May 2 Individual paper presentations

Final papers due, Friday, May 4

Grading

The bulk of your performance will be based on your ability to contribute to and finish an original research project, suitable for conference presentation and/or publication. Depending on class interests there may be a collaborative project that you can connect your work to. This obviously will depend on your ability to learn the relevant literature, synthesize those aspects relevant to your research, pose appropriate research questions and hypotheses, identify appropriate methods and materials for analysis, and writing up the results. Regular attendance is assumed, of course. The following tasks will be scheduled:

Discussion leading (15%): prepare handout for class based on class readings for a given day that helps identify key issues in theory and method and help lead discussion on those readings.

Research critique presented in class (20%): Identify key research article relevant to project for critique and presentation in class (2 page write-up, with one page handout). Discuss its relevance, theory, method, strengths and weaknesses, assumptions, etc. These articles will presumably be helpful in updating our class readings and adding to the class bibliography. Be sure to provide full citation, hard copy and pdf file if possible to the instructor by Monday of the week in question to distribute to the class.

Preliminary research proposal (15%): Prepare 5 to 7 page double-spaced paper that identifies a key framing issue, reviews relevant literature, suggests appropriate data and ways to access them, and suggest analytic approaches for coding, categorization, etc. Include your bibliography.

Final paper (50%): Refine literature review, questions, analysis, and discussion for final research article based on project. Paper will have the usual sections and follow the norms of a research presentation in the field, suitable for submission to ICA or related conference. This may be collaborative with approval by the instructor. Further details and guidelines to be reviewed in class.
